Founder:

River has experienced loss of art works as a result of fire, flood, and building collapse as well as seeing deceased artists vanish from art awareness portals, websites, or any other catalog. This vanishing history of artistic achievement led River to establish the museum. The museum seeks to preserve a history of artists and their achievements.

In all of River's creative ventures, relentless investigation guided by artistic freedom has been his constant hallmark.

Art Community

River has always been active in sharing projects and creating public awareness of other artists. In his various periods, he created films, books, websites and performance venues. The artists he featured included visual artists, composers, musicians, singer-songwriters, authors, poets, performance artists, actors, and philosophers. It is his wish that the Museum continue this process of including local artists in collaborative projects and publications promoting their creative efforts.

100 Year Artists' Legacy

Saving artists' work for posterity is a fundamental responsibility of the museum. American cultural heritage is disappearing into the landfill. Senior artists are at the end of their lives and family members are often not equipped to preserve the artist's body of work. We believe that there are important artists who are overlooked by the financial/art world institutions and that these artists should have their body of work preserved for 100 years so that future generations, unencumbered by political and monetary agendas, may decide what is important to our cultural heritage.

Home Site

A long range goal is developing a permanent site for the museum. Potential locations include Fairfield, Connecticut, Ulster County, New York, and Santa Fe, New Mexico

First Steps

Storage of ready to ship art shows and outreach to include participation of museums and arts groups.
