Art Community

Artists who have not secured a place in history by the professional gallery, museum, auction and big money complex will need to find their own way for their art to survive. This Museum may be your answer.

100 Year Artists' Legacy

What is the 100-year legacy program? Saving artists' work for posterity is a fundamental responsibility of the museum. American cultural heritage is disappearing into the landfill. Senior artists are at the end of their lives and family members are often not equipped to preserve the artist's body of work. We believe that there are important artists who are overlooked by the financial/art world institutions and that these artists should have their body of work preserved for 100 years so that future generations, unencumbered by political and monetary agendas, may decide what is important to our cultural heritage.

Your Art

Where will your art be in 100 years? If you're unsure about the answer consider this. American culture has been replaced by advertising dollars representing the money grab dominating the "Art World". Don't let them rub you out of history. We the Artists, need the support of our community who respects un-commercialized art. Be part of taking back the future for artists.

First Steps

Storage of ready to ship art shows and outreach to include other museums and arts groups is a vital concern to keep our artists visible to the community.

1. How to document your work

2. Storage facility with shipping and receiving service.

3. Shipping crates customized for easy unpack and repack.

4. Interactive Website and database

5. PR ongoing management

6. Sustaining Members

If you believe as we do, that art is a vital resource for our future generations, then help us start the process of securing your American art.

If it is important that your art continues to survive after your passing, then the 100 Years Legacy Project is important for you.

We hope to have funding assistance soon for artists unable to support storage costs.
